

'Conflicting Judgments by Courts'

"Prima facie, the assessee has clearly converted cash into cheque through long-term capital gains. In substance, these are not genuine transactions. But various courts giving conflicting judgments on mostly the same set of facts have compounded the problem," Lakhani said.

The penny stock deals, which have also drawn the ire of the Securities and Exchange Board of India (Sebi), are played out over a year to avoid capital gains tax. In most cases, back-to-back transactions are entered into with the promoters of these companies, who directly or indirectly control the bulk of the shares.

Here's how these deals happened: A person holding undisclosed cash bought shares of a thinly traded illiquid scrip via regular trade on the exchange. After a year, by when the stock price was rigged up, the person sold the shares to a promoter-controlled entity. He received a cheque (the proceeds from the stock sale) and handed over the cash along with a fee for the 'service'. This cash was then used for another person with a different intention — who booked losses to reduce his tax outgo.

"The second person bought the stock at the high, rigged-up level and then waited for the price to collapse. Once the stock fell, he dumped the shares at a loss while simultaneously collecting the cash, minus the service charges," said a source. In this two-legged deal, the first person bought low, sold high and regularised hidden cash. The second person bought high, sold low, received cash, and booked a loss to reduce his tax outgo. With the share price down, the game was replayed with a different person looking for an avenue to legitimise his cash.

Since Sebi and government agencies are now aware of such trades and the mechanisms, these deals have almost dried up. The situation is similar with disputes involving invocation of Section 68 of the Income tax Act, where the department has made additions while questioning the genuineness of deals where stocks are issued at absurdly high prices to investors. "As regards share capital transactions, where the assessee has proved his identity and creditworthiness, the department is alleging the transactions are not genuine," said Lakhani. Under the circumstances, there should either be an option for quick settlement or for ensuring that one set of judicial pronouncements are delivered.
